EC Summit Stalls On Short-Term Reform Procedures

Her voice rising in irritation, Mrs. Thatcher added, "Britain came here with high hopes." But, regarding practical changes, she added, "We have not made the proanged, we have not make the pro-gress we sought." Britain had pro-posed that the leaders agree on a greater use of majority voting and restrict the use of the veto.

She told a radio interviewer later: "The Germans recently invoked the national veto and now they want this airy-fairy conference."

Prime Minister Rund Lubbers of the Netherlands said the meeting was a "disappointing experience." His foreign minister, Hans Van Den Broek, added, "We expected a qualitative leap forward which failed to materialize

The summit, held in the Castello Sforzesco, a 15th-century fortress in Milan, lasted for an unusual two full days. The atmosphere was described by officials as tense and frequently argumentative.

This has not been an easy conference," Mrs. Thatcher said. The proposal to call a special reform conference was backed by all the member states except Britain. Denmark and Greece. The adoption of short-term measures to improve decision-making, like those in the British proposal, were blocked by Greece, Mr. Craxi said.

Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou vetoed the short-term measures in irritation over the calling of the conference, officials said. Greece is opposed to the mandate of the conference for changing the Treaty of Rome, the 1957 document founding the community.

Vulnerable Airports Listed Lisa Belkin of The New York

Times reported from Washington: The Reagan administration has received a report from the Federal Aviation Administration listing airports around the world that may be vulnerable to hijackers because of lax security, federal aviation of-ficials said Friday.

The White House is considering restrictions on air traffic between the foreign airports cited and the United States

On June 18, President Ronald Reagan announced that he had ordered the FAA to review security systems at airports around the world in response to the TWA hijacking. The resulting report was delivered to the White House on Tuesday, according to Edward Pinto, an FAA spokesman.

The list of airports will not be made public in the near future, Mr. Pinto said Friday.

A spokesman for the Department of Transportation, which oversaw the report, said, "We will not publicize those deficiencies." If the United States said, for example, that a certain airport "had a terri-ble security system and you can drive a truck through their baggage area," the spokesman added, it might encourage terrorism at that airport.

The spokesman said, "If there are deficiencies at any particular airport, we will try to work with those countries to bring security up to our standards." If improvements 'are not made, he said, "the secretary of transportation will take action to suspend service to and from those countries."

Richard Herzberg, 33, arrived Sunday at the home of Nabih Berri. He and three other Americans were kept separately from the hostages taken from the TWA plane.

Mugabe Assails Whites as 'Racists'

HARARE, Zimbabwe (UPI) — Prime Minister Robert G. Mugabe sharply criticized Zimbabwe's whites on Sunday, calling them racists for supporting the rightist party of Ian Smith, the former prime minister, in last week's general election for the 20 seats in Parliament reserved for White voters gave Mr. Smith's party 15 sears, rejecting a group of moderates encouraged by the Mugabe government. Mr. Mugabe's guerrillas fought a war in the 1970s against Mr. Smith's white-minority government, but after coming to power Mr. Mugabe adopted a policy of reconciliation with his former enemies.

Mr. Mugabe, at a rally in the town of Chinhoyi for Monday and Tuesday's elections for 80 black-reserved seats, said that the vote for Mr. Smith showed the whites "are still therefore, by and large, the racists of the past" and had rejected reconciliation. "We will not allow any racist to enjoy the comforts of this country," he said, "and those therefore who have voted for Ian Smith and continue to support him will have no one to

Reagan Urges Curbs on Soviet Envoys

WASHINGTON (UPI) — President Ronald Reagan has accused the Soviet Union of "stealing or buying" U.S. military and industrial secrets, and said the United States should restrict the number of Soviet diplomats llowed in the country.

Mr. Reagan said in his weekly radio address Saturday, "We're in a long twilight struggle with an implacable foe of freedom." He said that 30 to 40 percent of Soviet diplomats "are known or suspected intelligence officers and all can be called upon by the KGB," and "we need to reduce the size of the hostile intelligence we're up against in this country."

Mr. Reagan also called for an end to many restrictions on the CiA imposed in the 1970s that he said "unduly hampered us."

Baltimore Man Flew On 2 A-Bomb Flights

Jacob Beser of Baltimore was a 24-year-old radar specialist aboard the Enola Gay on Aug. 6. 1945 when it dropped the stomic bomb nicknamed "Little Boy" on Hiroshima. Three days later, he was aboard another B-29 when "Fat Man" was dropped on Nagasaki. He was the only person to serve as a crew member on the attack aircraft on both missions.

Recently retired from the Westinghouse Corp., where he worked mostly on classified projects, Mr. Beser told The shington Post that the question he is asked most often is. "Would you do it again?" And would be?

"Given the same circumstances in the same kind of a context, the answer is yes," he said. "However, you have to admit that the circumstances don't exist now. They probably never will again. I have no regrets, no remorse about it."

Estimates of the number of people who were killed, injured and missing in the bombing of Hiroshima and Nagasaki range roughly from 200,000 to 300,000. Like others before him, Mr. Beser said that if the United States had invaded Japan instead of bombing it, there was a casualty potential of over a million people; that's what was avoided."

President Ronald Reagan was once a lifeguard, and in the 1950s and '60s, films like "The Girl from Jones Beach" and "Beach Blanket Bingo" glorified the job. Back then there were plenty of applicants. Now, however, lifeguards for beaches in the New York City area are bard to find. Up to 50 hours of training are required, but the pay is only about $6 an hour, compared to $9, for example, for a construction worker.

prospective members to sign an oath stating that they will not seek to change the bylaws that exclude women. That move has simply escalated the furor. Members who want women admitted are considering challenging the policy in court.

The United States spends more er capita on health than any country in the world, yet it is the one Vestern industrial democracy that does not treat health care as a basic national right. On the other hand, it will not stand for any health delivery system that shuts out critically ill patients because of their inabil-

Over the years, an improvised system of hidden subsidies came nto being to address the problem. The hospital bills of the uninsured were paid by the hospital balls of the insured, a mechanism of "cost-shifting" that thrived, until the onset of the 1980s, in a milieu of nerous bospital-reimbursement formulas built into the Medicare Europe, July 1985.

In the exclusive middle-range saloon market, there's now a completely new reason for choosing the BMW 5-Series. It's the competition.

Are you aware of all the facts?

Over the past few months, BMW 5-Series competitors have been getting quite

As a result of some admittedly not entirely uninteresting new model introductions. We welcome the news.

Because it at last gives Europe's more demanding drivers a real basis for checking out which car actually offers them the best value for their money. Naturally, you can take features like high quality construction, a contemporary design concept, exceptional standards of comfort and safety for granted in any internationally recognised car of this class. And they're all reasons enough for driving an above-average car. However, we still don't think they're enough to help you choose between the very best alternatives at this level. We believe it's essential to take a closer look at the fundamental differences between the leading makes before making your decision. So we'd like to give you a few factual hints An in-line 6-cylinder engine guarantees than 4 or 5 cylinders.

1. Electronic fuel injection. You'll be surprised how many cars with impressive-sounding names, and equally impressive prices, still offer conventional carburettor technology.

Not so BMW. More than anything else, BMW exclusivity stands for the very latest in automotive technologies.

That's why you can take all the performance, economy and environmental consciousness of electronic fuel injection for granted with BMW, starting with the 518i. Not only a significant contributor to longlasting quality but also to lasting value.

2. Digital Motor Electronics. 5. Contemporary.

These days, any so-called quality car range that doesn't offer you Digital Motor Electronics, isn't offering you the best in engine technology. With BMW, you'll discover it's already a standard on the 525e. Digital Motor Electronics (DME) - the completely computerised engine management and control system - ensures far-reaching fuel-mix and ignition advantages, in terms of performance, economy and exhaust emissions, even when used in conjunction with a catalyst. As many as four of the 5-Series models noticeably smoother running refinement BMW gives you all the benefits from as low as 2 litres.

The fact that it's universally accepted that 6 cylinders are a prerequisite for really top-class motoring refinement is amply illustrated by the number of manufacturers who offer it on their higher capacity and higher priced models.

A BMW owner is someone who isn't willing to compromise on refinement even at two

The BMW 5-Series doesn't just meet the strictest quality criteria. It also reflects the demands of our time. BMW exploits the most advanced technologies available to resolve the conflict between dynamic and responsible driving. And the BMW 5-Series combines the classic sporting personality of a BMW with a strictly functional sense of style to create a car with a truly unique character: the concentration on inner values, without the usual obtrusive demonstration of status, leads to a pleasingly new and unpretentious dimension in exclusivity an understatement that takes a positive step towards the more critical and rational attitudes of our day.

If you compare, point by point, the various alternatives in terms of price and value, you're sure to come to the same conclusion as us. There's really only one answer: BMW is the better way to drive.

But that's something you should experience for yourself. So why not ask your nearest BMW dealer for a personal test drive?

You can also judge the quality of a model range by its top models.

With the BMW 5-Series you can get up to 3.5 litres capacity and all the torque and unrivalled performance that goes with it. Although the BMW 5-Series models belong to the so-called "exclusive middlerange" category, they nevertheless reflect especially the high performance 535i, M 5351 and M 5 versions - many of the superlative qualities of their larger stablemates, particularly in the exceptional ride and safety reserves of their advanced suspension system.

Quebec After Lévesque

The recent resignation of Quebec's premier, René Lévesque, marks the end of a turbulent chapter in Quebec's and Canada's history. Ostensibly, Mr. Lévesque leaves office under a political cloud. His Parti Québécois trails the opposition Liberal Party by more than two-toone in the polls and seems sure to lose the next provincial election. The party is split between those who agree with Mr. Lévesque's emphasis on economic issues and those who want to fight the next election on the issue of separatism from the rest of Canada. Clearly the party has failed in its purpose of separating mostly French-speaking Quebec from the mostly English-speaking remainder of the country.

Yet in another sense Mr. Levesque and his movement have been successful. They have resolved, though at some cost, a difficult problem that deeply affects the daily lives and prospects of about six million residents of Quebec. The problem is language, and it came to the fore in the 1960s. Quebec's French-speakers, part of a tradition-bound rural society, educated only scantily in church schools, suddenly were receiving the education they needed to get ahead in industrial North America. But in the big office buildings of Montreal, important business was conducted in English.

Mr. Levesque's party came to power in 1976 and passed a series of laws requiring the use of French in everyday life. This was costly: Many businesses left Montreal. It was often unfair to individuals. Yet it opened opportunities to those whose first language was French.

Mr. Lévesque was less successful in his goal of achieving separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. His 1980 referendum calling for some form of independence was rejected not only by the English-speaking minority but also by the French-speaking majority in Quebec. In a recent poll, only 4 percent of Quebec respondents said they favored independence.

The road for the Parti Québecois has been mostly downhill since. But the party has been the victim just as much of its success as of its failures. The problem that it and Canada's federal government have been grappling with is not likely to recur. Economically, if not linguistically, Quebec is part of industrial North America. Politically, Quebec is firmly, if still a bit uncomfortably, part of Canada. That is a solution—and arms. is a solution — and given the passions and the violence that attended the politics of separatism, it is one of the better solutions that

Downward, Refreshingly

A few weeks ago the Northrop Corp. offered to sell the U.S. Air Force the new F-20 fighter jet for less than the service is paying for General Dynamics' F-16. Northrop said the planes are generally comparable, so its offer amounted to equal firepower at a lower cost. Now General Dynamics has countered by offering to sell a somewhat stripped-down F-16 for less than an F-20. The company said it was responding not so much to Northrop as to general "budget pressures" and to an apparent new willingness by the air force to have its planes outlitted according to their specific missions. A customized plane needs less equipment than one such as the existing F-16, which is built for a variety of roles.

It is not every day that two defense contractors compete downward; competition works, as defense reformers said it would. Northrop's offer, born of an inability to sell the F-20 abroad, and General Dynamics' response created a buyer's market. Taxpayers are the buyers. The home team wins one for a change.

The air force could also win. The prices of tactical aircraft have increased mightily in recent years. A fully equipped F-16 now costs about $20 million (the air force's most sophisticated fighter, the F-15, costs still more). Genabout $6 million on customized planes. The air F-16s. The new proposals would let it buy the same number of planes for fewer dollars or, as General Dynamics noted hopefully in its offer, more planes for the same number of dollars. Who can be against that?

There is, however, another dimension to this competition. The companies are not simply squeezing their prices on a product; they are squeezing the product. They are offering to sell the air force lesser airplanes. This is a case of competition acting as a check not just on the contractors but on the ambitions of the service as well. To those who think too many weapons are "gold-plated," this may be good news.

But military arguments ought to be heard along with fiscal ones. Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger warned last year against buying the F-20 on the ground that it "cannot meet scenarios our pilots may have to face." That issue is to be reviewed by defense planners next month. The Pentagon ought to buy the cheapest planes possible. But it should not be driven by good procurement salesmanship to make bad weapons decisions.

Young and Poor in America

A serious measure of a society is how it treats its children, and by that measure, the United States is in trouble. In the last few years, children have become, before our very eyes, the poorest segment of the population, and every day brings new evidence that their plight is, if anything, growing worse. Think of a social ill: unemployment, continuing at a rate that would have alarmed Americans 20 years ago . . . the decline in family and rise in single-family homes . . . the increase in hungry Americans. All affect children worst. It is utopian to think of solving all such social ills, but it is only decent to think of trying to do the next best thing: saving the next generation. According to recent Congressional reports children now constitute 40 percent of the nation's poor - nearly 14 million youngsters. One of five young Americans lives in poverty. The proportion is already twice that for poor people in general, and it is growing. More than half of poor children live in femaleheaded households, most of which are poor almost by definition. The mothers are likely to be young, unmarried, undereducated and inca-pable of earning more than poverty wages. Nor are things improving. The number of illegitimate births is rising. In 1980, nearly 20 percent of all births, and nearly half of black births, were to unwed mothers.

A new study by the Children's Defense Fund shows how black children, especially, have been "sliding backward" over the last five years. They are now twice as likely as white children to die before their first birthday, three times as likely to be poor, and five times as likely to live on welfare. Though the need for governmental action seems obvious, there is no consensus on what should be done. President Reagan's proposed tax revision would reduce the tax burden for poor families, but that promise is offset by his plan to eliminate deductions for state and local taxes. Senators Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York and Christopher Dodd of Connecticut are pushing two measures that aim to help poor children through a combination of tax relief and better social-service programs.

Mr. Movnihan would establish a minimun benefit level for families receiving welfare and food stamps. He would give welfare benefits even to two-parent families while helping the states to reduce welfare dependency with work programs. Mr. Dodd, more ambitiously, would raise the minimum wage from $3.35 to $4 an hour and increase funding for child health, welfare and education programs. Both measures would expand efforts to reduce teenage pregnancy. These bills may not offer the right mix of remedies and they are expensive, costing from $6 billion to $14 billion a year. What they say above all, however, is that inaction is a graver sin, and still more expen-sive. A society whose children are the poorest citizens loses every claim to greatness.

No amount of rejoicing at the hostages' promised deliverance should blind anyone to the fact that terrorism has secured a victory while international order has suffered. There can be no doubting the brutality of those who seized the TWA 727: The body of a marine bears witness to that. But that does not excuse some of the alarming reactions in America. If some U.S. spokesmen had their way, this crisis would have ended with the bang of a bomb; there could be no more vivid demonstration of the price we pay for the United States allowing 1910: 'Black Hand' Says It Killed Boy 1935: Electioneering in an Edgy Spain NEW YORK - Dr. Mariano Scimeca, the wealthy Italian physician of this city whose four-year-old son, Michael, was kidnapped some ten days ago, received a telephone message [on June 30] from an unidentified member of the Black Hand, stating that the child had been killed by the kidnappers because the ransom of $8,000 was not paid at the required time. Dr. Scimeca was warned that his second child, Gustavo, who is only seven months old, would be the next to be taken if the ransom were not paid. It is believed that the physician has been marked down by the Black Hand because he was an intimate friend of Lieutenant Petrosino, who was active in pursuing the gang, and who was killed by the Black Hand in Sicily several months ago.

MADRID - "For God and the Country" is the slogan for a nation-wide political cam-paign which was opened [on June 30] by Don José Gil Robles, the War Minister, and five other Ministers of the Catholic Popular Action and Agrarian parties with two hage open-air meetings, one in the ancient Castilian town of Medina del Campo, and the other in Valencia, the center of Left Republicanism. Meanwhile, Barcelona, the stronghold of anti-clericalism and syndicalism, is under martial law by order of the government. Señor Robles, the Catholic Popular Action leader, flew to the Catalan capital [on June 29] and decreed that persons responsible for disturbances in the city shall be subject to summary jurisdiction by military tribunals immediately after they are captured.

LONDON — A namesake of mine in South Africa, who makes a handsome living saturizing the government's race policies, once wrote a play called "Paradise Is Closing Down." It was about whites suddenly ed into a national convention. finding their situation reversed - instead of being on the outside, looking in their own enclosures, looking out.

The first glimmerings of this situation can be detected in the present unrest in the country. In the Kirkwood area of the Eastern Cape, white farmers are fencing their properties, installing floodlighting, and calling for night patrols. In Kwanobuhle black township, the homes of all 32 black policemen, representatives of the white authority, have been de-stroyed, and the policemen and their families live now under protection in a new block. Similarly, in the Transvaal, many black councillors -"apartheid collaborators" - are be-

into the black enclosures, they were ing given collective protection. Not too much should be made of this yet. The segregated white sub-urbs are still insulated from black unrest and the capacity of the white state to lash back has scarcely been tested. But there is no doubt that a qualitative change has come over the black struggle in South Africa. Noth-ing quite like this has been seen before, even after the Sharpeville mas-sacre in 1960 or Soweto in 1976. Minister of Police Louis le Grange has disclosed that 381 blacks died in the unrest in the first four months of this year and 1,500 were injured. No one had suspected the figures were so high. Some blacks were killed by the police, others by fellow-blacks. The minister said the unrest was spreading and that the situation was "extremely worrying."

The African National Congress, in exile now for 25 years, is jubilant. Last February, it called on South Africa's urban blacks to make their townships ungovernable, and almost immediately they responded. Now the ANC has issued a statement from its Lusaka headquarters. "The future its Lusaka neadquarters. "The future is within our grasp," it said, claiming that the legitimacy of white authority had been "largely destroyed" in black townships and that "the conditions for a revolutionary leap forward are beginning to mature." The ANC believes the white ruling class is in "economic and political cricis." "economic and political crisis."

In its long years in exile, the ANC has delivered a fair number of wildly unrealistic prophecies, but this statement has a new ring of self-confidence and a new ring of self-co dence and excitement, exuding a new perception of the future.

The ANCs February call fell on receptive ears because the timing was right. A combination of factors had produced just the right climate among urban blacks.

First, close to a quarter of the black labor force in South Africa is unemployed. And an academic, Professor Hermann Giliomee, claims that "half of the black population now lives in ibsolute poverty."

Second, the Nkomati Accord severed the ANC's trails into South Africa, and the effect of this has been to internalize the black struggle. Third, the new black trade union movement has reached take-off. It is on the verge of becoming a dominant factor in black politics. Fourth, President Pieter Botha's repeated talk of apartheid reform has convinced opponents of apartheid at a critical point has been reached where apartheid is on the defensive. Mr. Botha and his ministers admit now that apartheid is obsolete - that it is a pre-industrial ideology unfitted for a post-industrial country. South Africa has confirmed de Tocqueville's thesis that the dangerous mo-ment for a bad government comes when it introduces reforms.

This explains why recent apartheid reforms have had so little internal and international impact. Measured against apartheid principles, some of these reforms are of fundamental importance. But because Mr. Botha himself has been undermining the credibility of apartheid ideology since 1979, his opponents now focus on the dismantling of the structure.

To dismiss all apartheid reforms as cosmetic is to accept that apartheid is static: that it is durable, impervious to pressure. It implies, too, that the whites of South Africa are unable to perceive that their whole lifestyle is being endangered, and too stupid to know how to try to save it. The ANC's Lusaka statement begins to correct this superficial dismissal of the significance of the reforms.

Every reform affects the psychological balance between ruler and ruled and cannot therefore be dismissed as "meaningless." The ANC statement is nearer the mark when it interprets the reforms as symptoms of a "deep-ening crisis" in the South African government. What is happening is that the ideology of apartheid, which has underpinned the system of white rule since 1948, is breaking up. White rule can continue without it, but it gave the system a cohesion and, in Afrikaner eyes, a legitimacy that will no longer be there. The resultant confusion is important psychologically for Afrikaners. They are not merely quarreling, they are deeply split. To expect Mr. Botha at this stage to grant blacks "meaningful political rights" is to miss the point of the current process. By the time he is ready to give blacks these rights, the game will be over: This is the end of the process of change, not the start. The turmoil will alter the whole pattern of white politics, terminating the structure whereby Afrikaner rule is superimposed on white rule, and bringing, first, the more pragmatic English-speaking whites into the decision-making process, and then black leaders themselves. There can be no doubt now that Mr. Botha is preparing to talk to some of his black political oppo-nents, starting probably with Chief Gatsha Buthelezi, but also including. possibly, Bishop Desmond Tutu, Dr. Nihato Motlana, and others.

Mr. Botha must know, too, that there is no point in talking to black leaders unless he has something to talk to them about. This means talking eventually about a federal system of government for South Africa. The conty as something to be countered by scene of these talks would be the correcting those who misunderstand

"national forum" he wants to set up, talk face-to-face, it was hoped, neverand which some of his advisers are theless, that others might take Mr. already suggesting should be expand- Botha's place, particularly business.

Some observers believe the present unrest will subside and the black mind, finally, that it is not going to go townships be made governable again down the drain with apartheid. One townships be made governable again only if recognized black leaders can be persuaded to talk to their people - that no act of reform (outside of granting the vote) can restore calm. Consultation between Mr. Botha's government and credible black leaders, therefore, is the key to evolutionary change. But where does this leave the ANC, the oldest and most important black organization?

A few months ago, South Africa buzzed with talk of negotiations between ANC leaders and prominent South Africans. While it was accepted that the time was not ripe for the ANC and Mr. Botha's government to

Truth With a

Sharp Edge

By James, Reston

WASHINGTON — For the first

W time since the last world war, according to the U.S. Treasury, the national government in May spent more than twice as much money as it took in. This set a new monthly budget deficit of $40.5 billion.

Also, according to the Commerce Department, the nation's trade defi-cit amounted to $12.7 billion in May, the second highest on record. U.S. imports that month rose to a near-record of $30.1 billion, while exports sank to the lowest level in 15 months.

These were the administration's own reports of the facts, and its reac-tion to these facts was interesting when David Stockman, the director of the Office of Management and Budget, spoke privately about them June 5 in Washington to directors of

several members of Congress.

Mr. Stockman, who always seems to get in irouble around here for telling the truth of all and the congress of th agreed to raise laxes, the federal defi-cit would probably remain around $200 billion a year through 1988.

"As a policy matter," Mr. Stock-man said, "it is obvious enough that to close this threatening $200-billion budget gap, we must either massively cut spending or raise taxes by large, unprecedented magnitudes — or by the likes of some, enact a sweeping mixture of both."

The New York Times sot a copy of

Mr. Stockman said, "we she spoke for both the administration and Con-gress] have increasingly resorted to squaring the circle with accounting gimmicks, evasions, half-truths and domnited discussiving our budget

An important change has come over business: It has made up its demand it is making is to abolish pass laws - about as dramatic a step as any government could take. But recent indications are that the ANC does not want to talk to organized business just yet. Whether this is because it is preparing for its water-shed post-Nkomati conference, to be held soon, and does not want to be seen fraternizing with the enemy, or whether the motive goes deeper - an intensification, perhaps, of the armed struggle — is still to be seen.

But if ever white and black South Africans are to come together to build a common society, and not destroy each other, the government and the ANC will have to talk. Apart from Chief Buthelezi's huge, but largely Zulu-based Inkatha, there is no black group with the ANC's experience, influence and stability.

The day is coming when Mr. Botha will need to talk to black leaders who can speak for their people; only they can bring the townships back into governability. The present vacuum in organized black leadership could easily produce a dangerous anarchy.

As Professor Giliomee writes: "White South Africa should once and for all learn the lesson that there is one thing more dangerous than a strong black political party, and that is the absence of it."

ported by the story, gave the impression that Mr. Stockman favored a tax increase, though he merely called it an option. So the administration ig-nored the burden of the speech and turned its anger on the headline.

Mr. Stockman's off-the-record speech — as if anything said before 50 stockbrokers, congressmen and their wives can be off the record may have been imprudent politically, but nobody could question the accu-racy of his facts or the clarity of his criticism of the administration and the Congress. "The degree of political divisions and policy conflict within our gov-erning institutions has now reached such an extreme and intense state that it is nearly impossible to see where the political will and consensus will come from that is necessary to enact any plan big enough to balance the books — or even substantially close the gap," he said.

"The basic fact is that we are violating badly, even wantonly, the car-dinal rule of sound public finance: Governments must extract from the people in taxes what they dispense in benefits, services and protections. Perhaps not every year, but certainly under the headline "Stockman Says over any intermediate period of time. "Indeed," Mr. Stockman added, "if the Securities and Exchange Comecutive and legislative branches, many of us would be in jail." How did the administration react?

It not only denied the headline but also the body of the speech. "He didn't say it," President Reagan said on his way back from Chicago. "The story is fallacious. We have the story is fallacious, when he seed." speech. We know what he said."

a diversion and a disgrace. Mr. Stockman laid it on the line:

WASHINGTON — Archie Lewellyn Grant, 84, died yesterday in a nursing home in Osca-loosa, Florida, following a short ill-ness. He was the last driver to have signaled before turning. Mr. Grant, known to generations of school kids as "Mr. Last," claimed to have made the turn that made him famous in 1984. He was living in Washington at the time, and was about to make a right turn on Connecticut Avenue when for come reason he signaled his inten-tions. "I don't know what got into me," he said later. "I just flipped the stalk and the signal went on." Mr. Grant's claim was never officially verified, but most scholars of extinct customs take him at his word. In fact, the more they studied

Mr. Grant the more apparent it became that he was the last person to do a number of things. He was, for instance, the last person to stop for a yellow light, come to a complete stop at a stop sign or give pedestrians the right of way. He was also the last person to turn down his car radio at night when his windows were open.

In 1984 he called a Freedom Fighter a mercenary and then, giggling at what he had done, apologized. After his move to Florida, school children visiting Disney World came to see him. He would tell them some of the things that he had been the last to do. He was the last person to read an entire book, eat hot pasta, become engaged before mar-riage, never have ham and cheese on a croissant, and never wear colored underwear. "White is the only color for me," he would assert. Mr. Grant had other "lasts" to his credit. He was the last person never to have been in therapy, to man, was also the last person to say have been married only once and to be absolutely sure he was a heterohave been married only once and to

to have worn knickers in his youth and to have been in a movie theater with more than 100 scats. He claimed to be the last person to have paid less than $2 for a box of popcorn, but scholars disputed that assertion. He was indisputably the last person to have gone to a "men's only" barber shop and, shortly be-fore his death, he became the last person never to have jogged. He was very proud of that.

Even in speech, Mr. Grant com-piled some lasts. He was the last person to say ice box or phono-graph or (in 1974) Victrola. Until the ead, he spoke of Armistice Day. not Veterans Day, and he never knew what President's Day was. Until the end, Mr. Grant regaled school children with the way things used to be. Just last Friday, he told some kids how he had been the last person to have eaten plain vanilla ice cream, to have had his groceries packed in a paper bag at Safeway, and not to have been computer literate. America: Bully in the UN?

In his opinion column "UN Friends Can Easily Be Counted" (June 21), Senator Robert J. Kasten Jr. bemoans the lack of support that the United States finds at the United Nations and suggests that "Congress should keep this widespread lack of support at the United Nations in mind when it reviews requests for foreign assistance,"

The idea that the United Nations is a forum for which support of the United States can be bought, or alter-natively demanded under duress, is repugnant. It is surely the one place where all nations should be free to vote according to their own interests and to what they perceive as the in-terests of the world at large. Increasingly blatantly, the United States attempts to force other nations to toe the U.S. line, and shows anger when they don't. Growing global anti-Americanism has been a concern of the Reagan administration but

Taiwan would then face the possi-heighten political struggles between economic-upgrading program would be damaged, for businessmen would be pushed to channel more of their investment overseas, and the educated elite would be discouraged from returning to the island. Foreign in-vestors would be less inclined to

If Taipei chose another road, independence, its internal politics would be destabilized. The Knomintang whose authority rests on the claim that it is the true government of all China, would lose legitimacy. Politi-cal conflicts would heighten between supporters and foes of independence.

Facing a prospectively indepen-dent Taiwan, Beijing would be tempted to launch a pro-emptive strike because of strong nationalism and fear that a "do nothing" policy would damage its international credibility. Independent, Taiwan would be more isolated than ever. No major

This, the OECD notes, is largely the result of increased flerings by banks wishing to strengthen their balance-sheet

HE banks' shift away from their traditional loan business, the OECD notes, "is no doubt the most important change that has confronted the international capital market durig the past decade." It added: It "is clear that these changes do ot necessarily imply a diminished role for banks in the process f international financial intermediation. Rather, the experience f recent months suggests a growing involvement of banks as orrowers, on the one hand, and as investors, intermediaries and aders in the securities markets, on the other."

There is no measure available on the volume of bonds being eld by banks. But the trend has investment bankers worried westment banks hold bonds as inventory to trade with their ients — not as portfolio investments for their own account. The fear is that when it is no longer profitable for commercial anks to hold these securities — when the short-term financing asts start rising to levels exceeding the coupon income of the onds — there will be a tidal wave of selling that the market will ot be able to bear. For now, however, such worries carry little weight. The market nded the week cheered by the prospects of yet lower U.S. sterest rates and further capital gains on outstanding issues. The reasons for this view were: A less ebullient increase than spected in the leading economic indicators for May; a better-nan-expected reception in New York to the Treasury's sale of 17 billion of notes and bonds, and the resignation of Lyle E. ramley, a Carter appointee, from the Federal Reserve Board. fr. Gramley's resignation opens the way for President Ronald eagan to fill the post with someone more likely to favor gressive easing of monetary policy.

The improved outlook, coupled with more generous pricing on rw issues, helped revive the fixed-coupon sector of the Eurodolr market. With the 10-year, 10-percent bonds of a week earlier ading at substantial five-point discounts, the new issues were ostly about five years, carrying yields of around 10 percent. Statoil, the Norwegian state-owned oil company, sold $170 illion of five-year, 10-percent notes at a price of 100% for a yield 9.93 percent. The issue got off to a rocky start when it became town that the paper did not carry an explicit government tarantee as had previous Statoil issues, but by week's end it had from crashing.

The latest attempt, which may be the most cracial and divisive, will come Friday when oil minis-ters of the 13 OPEC govern-ments are convened in Vienna. Their problems will be complicated by the impatience of Sandi Arabia over the failure of most other countries to stick to the prices and production quotas of the cartel, the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries. Data Seen Sustaining Bond Rally

By James Sterngold New York Times Service

NEW YORK — Economists studying recent U.S. economic data are generally concluding that the outlook is troubled, a perception that appears likely to sustain the bond market rally that developed at the end of last week.

There continues to be a mix of data to interpret for signs of wheth-

Overall, despite the occasional sign to the contrary, the economy is lackfuster. The market will retain its basic bullish bias."

The U.S. government estimated two weeks ago that the economy was growing at a relatively robust 3.1-percent annual rate in the second quarter. The projection shook the bond market, and prices tum-

Toward the end of last week however, perceptions shifted. The Treasury's mini-refunding — in which it sold $17 billion of new securities over 3 days last week did not dampen the market.

We saw record demand last said Scott Pardee, executive vice president at Discount Corp. of New York, a bond dealer.

A factor in the background is the resignation from the Fed's board of governors of Lyle E. Gramley, regarded as a conservative about keeping the money supply and the economy growing at a restrained HACHETTE shareholders met on June 20, 1985 to approve the Group's management accounts for 1984. The meeting was chaired by M. Jean-Lin LAGARDERE, President.

LAGARDERE, President.

HACHETTE S.A., the parent company, posted a net profit in 1984 of F.Fr. 180.1 million, including F.Fr. 53.1 million due to capital gains. Meanwhile, the Hachette Group's share of consolidated profit for 1984-reached F.Fr. 202 million, as opposed to F.Fr. 1872 million in 1983. After taking account of capital gains and losses, consolidated profits were F.Fr. 265.4 million as opposed to F.Fr. 329.5 million in 1983. President Jean-Luc LAGARDERE, assessing these figures, laid considerable stress on the Hachette Group's policy of development and investment introduced in 1984-1985, which is to be continued throughout 1986 both in France and shroad.

As a result of this policy, the Hachette Group has in the last 18 months bought 100% of SEYMOUR PRESS, increased its abareholding in HACHETTE GOTCH (from 50% to 100%) and acquired a majority stake in the company which publishes TELEPROGRAMA, a high-circulation Spanish TV magazine. Hachette also took control of 42% of the capital of PATHE CINEMA, as also 50% of HARLEQUIN FRANCE, among other moves.

is contained in the June issue of Financial Market Trends, which is being published Monday by the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development. The study says many market par-tenpants believe the decline of conventional syndicated loan business is not transitory but, instead, "reflects a behavioral change of borrowers and lenders, both of which show nowadays a marked preference for more flexible financing in-

in 1982, the year developing countries' debt burdens reached crass proportions, the volume of international bank lending was double the annual rate of activity on the international bond market - $104 billion versus $50 billion.

By 1984, with bank lending on a steady downtrend and the Eurobond market in full expansion, the two markets provided about equal amounts of credit. This year, the Eurobond market pulled sharply about It is providing ratice the Missing of credit, running at an

The figures further show that international bank loans, which in 1982 accounted for 88 percent of total bank lending, have shriveled to 45 percent this year. Foreign bank loans have held steady at under 10 percent.

The remaining 46 percent of totail lending is now accounted for by what the OECD labels "other international facilities," which comprised just 5 percent of the total in 1982. These are predominantly note issuance facilities, multi-year lines of credit to back up the sale of short-term securities.

In the first six months, syndicated Euroloans and foreign bank loans totaled $17.6 billion - the lowest level since the mid-1970s and less than half the amount in the comparable period in 1983. "Other facilities" amounted to $18.7 billion so far this year, of which NIFs accounted for $16.5 billion. The OECD estimates that the volume of NIFs arranged to date exceeds $35 billion although, with the international market for shortterm paper still relatively undeveloped, only a small portion has been publized. Bankers active in the market estimate that the volume of These instruments are popular because banks earn fees for providing the backup without having to include the lending commitment in their balance sheets. Their popularity was demonstrated last week when Sweden's $1.5-billion facility was increased to $1.8 billion.

Even facilities that clearly will be drawn - such as Coca-Cola Co.'s financing of receivables through a special purpose company, EBS Fi-nancial Corp. — draw wide sup-port when the name is right. FOOD LOVER'S GUIDE TO PARIS.

As restaurant critic for the Trib, Patricia Wells has explored the treasures of food shopping and eating in Paris, from the bistros, cafés, cheese shops and outdoor markets, to the classic feasts.

The gastronomic delights of Paris are varied, historic, abundant - and too delicious to be left to chance. Food Lover's uncovers the many delights to be found all over this extraordinary city, and takes an up-to-date look at some of Paris' internationally known restourants.

Wells includes critical commentary, anecdates, history, local lore - as well as basic facts like business hours and nearest metro station. To recreate the taste of France at home, 50 recipes are included, gleaned from the notebooks of Parisian chefs.

Paperback, over 300 pages featuring a French/ English food glossary and 140 evocative photographs.

"Bound for France? Don't go without Patricia Wells's Food Lover's Guide to Paris"

Houston Chronide "Wells spills the beans here... No serious hedonist should go to Paris without it."

Goel Greene, New York Magazine "An illustrated tour through... one of the great food cities of the world."

Chase Manhattan Occidental Signs China Coal Pact

By Jim Mann Los Angeles Times Service BELIING - Ending more than five years of negotiations with Chinese officials, Occidental Petroleum Corp. on Saturday signed the final contract for development of one of the world's largest surface coal mines. The accord, valued at about $650 million, had been "announced" several times in the past The coal mine will be built 220 miles (350 kilometers) west of the capital in Shanxi province and will supply an estimated 15 million tons of coal a year after production starts in 1987. Approximately twothirds of the coal will be exported and the remainder will be used within China

With the exception of an aviation co-production agreement signed in April involving McDon-nell Douglas Corp., the Occidental contract is the biggest joint venture signed to date between a U.S. enterprise and the People's Republic tional Coal Development Corp.

Oxford on America.

(A Confidential Document.)

America is changing; that is agreed. Why, and from what, and to what, are not agreed.

Yet these questions touch us all.

For two years, 15 senior scholars from Oxford University studied these questions in depth. Their findings are now presented in America in Perspective.

America in Perspective is a detached, comprehensive look at the state of America today and the potential of America tomorrow. It grinds no axes and pulls no punches. It is based on fact, not opinion. Its purpose is understanding, not advocacy.

In 269 pages, America in Perspective casts a penetrating light on American politics, economics, markets and society. And a controversial light on the future of the American dream.

Above all, America in Perspective provides an objective account of America now and where it will be in ten years time. It may be the most comprehensive study of America in existence today.

Commissioned privately as a major $200,000 Oxford Analytica study, America in Perspective had such a profound effect on its sponsors that they now urge that it be given a wider audience.

Accordingly, a limited number are being released for public sale. You can obtain a copy by means of the coupon below.

N 1928, the U.S. Marines were bogged A down in Nicaragua, unable to contain the guerrillas led by Augusto Sandino. Instead of recognizing that Sandino was winning because he had the support of his people, instead of packing and leaving, the United States initiated the first dive-bombing missions in aviation history. Not for the first, and, unfortunately, not for the last time, the United States was expressing its confidence in victory through

But something more disturbing, and equally persistent, was being expressed by those planes. By deciding to bomb what it could not control, the United States was setting up a barrier that still stands. Almost 60 years later, the United States is still tormenting an adversary that it refuses to look in the face, divebombing it with more remote, less visible

Generals and politicians have always known that it is easier to kill an enemy one can portray as a demon. By coincidence, the year of dive-bombing, 1928, was the year Erich Maria Remarque's anti-war novel, "All Quiet on the Western Front," was published. In its culmiwestern front, was published in its cutini-nating scene, the protagonist, Paul, fatally wounds an enemy soldier and then must spend a day in a trench watching him die. It was the abstraction of the enemy that Paul stabbed; if he had known his face, his family, his past, he would have had difficulty killing him. Half a world away, dive-bombing became one more way in which the Pauls of this world could be separated from the Diegos and the Marias they were being asked to massacre.

To fraternize with the enemy is not easy.

Even when the will to do so is present, the practical obstacles may be insuperable. Once in a while, however, a book appears that allows us to know the enemy without having to watch him die, a book that shows us that the enemy is a human being a book that if widely read, may prevent a war. "Fire From the Mountain" is such a book. Though Sandinistas like Omar Cabezas have been branded the enemy by the Cabezas is unquestionably a revolutionary. He tells how he joined the Sandinista move. ment as a student, was sent into the mountains to train as a guerrilla, survived there, organized the peasants, escaped Somoza's raids. Americans who have forgotten that their country is the product of a revolution tend to find such stories dreary or repellent. But even they, I believe, will be in for a surprise.

Even for those who disagree with the anthor's politics, in other words, his story is fascinating. It is the story of how a patifully small handful of people overthrew a dictator whose family had been in power for 40 years, When they began, in the 1960s, scarcely any body could have predicted that the Sandins. tas, hounded by the police, surrounded by impoverished people who were too frightened to collaborate, would be able to build up ty keeping the faith.
In order to explain how this political minute occurred, Cabezas does not mouth slopens.

occurred. Cabezas does not mouth slogans or undertake windy sociological analyses. In-stead, he undresses himself in public. He concentrates on his own evolution. Because Cabe. zas became the man he is by hiding nothing from himself, he hides nothing from the reader: weaknesses, doubts, illusions, mistake, machismo, astonishment — all without a shade of narcissism. And because Cabezas has exposed the inner landscape of his humanity, the reader believes him when he gets around to his idealistic commitment to liberation, freedom and the common good.

There is much more than politics to this book. In Kathleen Weaver's energetically col-loquial translation, there is the author's m. traordinary sense of humor, the interested and earthiness of his language, the sensuality of his imagery. There are breathtaking eroic, almost mystical descriptions of nature, media. tions on history and the absurd, on the need for tenderness in the midst of toughness, on the way in which the past traps and forms the

Such visions seem astounding in a man who does not consider himself a writer at all - until we note, as Carlos Fuentes does in his striking introduction, that Cabezas comes from the country of Ernesto Cardenal and, above all, of Ruben Dario (1867-1916), the greatest Span-ish-language poet of his day. Only Nicaragna, where poetry has survived not in seminars but in the streets, could have produced Cabezas, as only Nicaragua could have produced the 80year-old man who, when he saw the guerrillas coming, said he had been expecting them to pick up the weapons that they left the last time:

The old man had been waiting 60 years for the sons of Sandino to come again.

To Americans, such a country must seem a mystery. Indeed it is a mystery to Cabezas, who discovers its secrets only slowly, treating it as one would a new lover. Let us hope that, rather than destroying Nicaragua from afar or, worse yet, dive-bombing the country a second time, the United States will start reading Nicaragua's poets — and Omar Cabezas.

Swimmer Gross Sets His 4th World Record

REMSCHEID, West Germany (AP) — Olympic champion Michael Gross set another world record, in the 200-meter butterfly, with a time of 1 minute 57.01 seconds in the West German Swimming Championships on Saturday.

Gross, 21, regained the record he had lost to the 1:57.04 that Jon Sieben of Australia won with during the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles. Gross now holds four world marks, having set one Thursday in the 400-meter freestyle. His records in the 100-meter butterfly and the 200-meter freestyle were set at the 1984 Olympics in winning gold medals.

Gross won the silver medal, behind Sieben, in the 200-meter butterfly at the Olympics but lost his world record to the Australian. Sieben bettered the mark of 1:57.05 that Gross had set Aug. 26, 1983 at Rome.

Matthys Takes 2 Stages of Tour de France

VITRE, France (UPI) — Rudy Matthys won his second straight stage of the Tour de France bicycle race here Sunday but failed to dislodge Belgian compatriot Eric Vanderaerden from the overall lead.

Matthys edged Irishman Sean Kelly and Vanderaerden in a pack finish after a final sprint to win the flat 242-kilometer (15-mile) leg from Lorient in 6 hours, 29 minutes and 21 seconds. Matthys took Saturday's opening stage of the 1985 tour, 256 kilometers from Vannes to Lanester, in 6:32.52. He nipped a group of 10 rides, including Vanderaerden, Kelly, Italian Guido Bontempi and Frenchman Francis Cactoing

Vanderaerden took the overall lead Saturday by winning bonus sprints along the route and continued that tactic Sunday to retain the overall leader's yellow jersey.

Law Society Narrowly Wins Sweeps Derby

DUBLIN (AP) — Law Society, the 15-to-8 favorite ridden by Pat Eddery, won the Irish Sweeps Derby on Saturday by half a length.

Eddery, who won his third Sweeps Derby, drove his mount through a bunched field on the inside rail in the final straight at The Curragh. Just before the finish Law Society caught up with Theatrical, who had taken the lead two furlougs out.

Damister was third and Infantry fourth. The unbeaten record of French Derby winner Monktar was spoiled as he laded to seventh after being a close third until the turn for home.

Law Society collected a $218,400 prize. Trainer Vincent O'Brien had kept Law Society free of a virulent virus that has attacked every other horse in his stable at

On Athletes and Drug Testing

New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Should jockeys and harnessracing drivers be subject to mandatory random testing for drug or alcohol use? The New Jersey Racing Commission says yes, has been conducting such a program in harness racing for the last year and has been upheld in lower-court rulings. The Illinois commission this month approved such a. program that is expected to be in place soon.

The harness and thoroughbred people have split on the issue. The harness industry almost unam-mously supports random testing, and such horsemen's groups as Harness Horsemen International have pushed vigorously to implement the program. But the Jockeys' Guild, representing thoroughbred riders, adamantly opposes it.

Five riders, including Angel Cordero and Bill Shoemaker, have filed suit in Federal District Court in Camden, New Jersey, to keep the program from extending to thoroughbred racing. They argue that random testing is unnecessary, demeaning and possibly unconstitutional.

In refusing to issue the jockeys a preliminary injunction against the tests last month, Judge Stanley J. Brotman said their rights were not being violated and that testing was needed to protect the commission's "ability to adequately police this industry." The harness groups say that testing riders protects both the horses and the public, and that the drivers should have nothing to fear.

Brotman and the harness groups are missing the point. In the narrowest sense, mandatory drug testing is flatly discriminatory in singling out riders and drivers within the industry. If they are going to be tested, then so should owners, trainers, stewards, starting-gate crews, public handicappers and anyone else whose actions affect the odds or out-come of a race. Horses will fly before that happens.

More important, the mandatory testing of athletes in any sport for their personal use of drugs and alcohol is, if not technically unconstitutional, an attempt to legislate morality that may be an invasion of privacy.

To keep racing honest, all tracks test horses for prohibited drugs that might be giving them an edge. That is similar to testing human athletes for is a far cry from prying into an athlete's personal problems or preferences. If a jockey or a second baseman has a drug or alcohol problem. .he horse's owner or the team owner has every right not to ride or play him, but it is not the business of the sport or of government to order the athlete to be tested.

Proponents of testing say that drug use is illegal and therefore a criminal rather than personal problem. Technically they are correct. Technically, adultery is illegal in some places and so is prostitution. Should athletes be subject to some kind of mandatory tests to see if they have been unfaithful to their sponses or consorting with call girls? If an extramantal affair is affecting a jockey's performance, is it the business of government to deter-mine his guilt and mandate treatment or penalties?

Of course not, and it should not be any different with drugs and alcohol. Those who employ athletes should have the compassion, as well as the selfotective business sense, to be alert and sensitive to possible drug and alcohol problems that are affecting their employees. They have every right to determine their own policies and penalties.

That's the way it works in other professions. No one is advocating mandatory random drug testing for surgeons, attorneys, corporate executives or other professionals

Why, then, this current obsession in sports with smoking out athletes with drug or alcohol prob-lems? It is probably no coincidence that many of those who are beating the issue most strongly are the same ones who bemoan the high salaries of today's atheltes, the strike threats by their unions, their sometimes unorthodox styles of living.

No one is similarly outraged by the salaries of movie stars and brain surgeons or the labor grievances of industrial workers, but athletes are held to a different standard. Because "we" - the public pay their salaries, athletes are supposed to be more accountable, to hew to cleaner morals. Never mind that "we" also pay the salaries of surgeons and construction workers and others whom "we" allow to lodge legitimate labor actions and conduct their personal lives as they see fit. It may be disillusioning to children of all ages that athletes, like anyone else in society, are susperformance-enhancing substances.

In both cases, the testing is done to prevent an athlete from getting an unfair advantage, but that or second-class citizens.

Becker, 17, a Poised and Powerful Prodigy

Cards' Andujar Keeps Mouth Shut, Mets Shut Out

ST. LOUIS — Joaquin Andujar was not talking to the press after he became the major leagues' first 13-game winner Saurday night. But catcher Tom Nieto said it all. "He was the same old Joaquin." Nieto said after Andujar pitched a six-hit shutout to help the St. Louis Cardinals beat the New York Mets, 6-0. "He had a good, sinking fastball and slider," said Nieto. "He didn't throw the change that much, maybe four or five times, but it was working too. He had good stuff." Nieto helped Andujar by driving home the game's first two runs with his first major league triple.

The victory pushed the Cardinals, who have won 11 of their last 14 games, into first place in the National League East, a half-game shead of the Montreal Expos. Asked about his performance, Andujar replied, "Sorry, no comment." He has refused to talk to cause, he said, he has not been shown proper respect.

Meanwhile, in the other clubhouse, the Mets' manager, Dave Johnson, held a 15-minute closed door meeting following the loss.
"We had a meeting — that's it," Johnson said at first. Then he added, "We haven't played that well in a month and a half. We haven't hit cisco, the Giants lost their ninth for 6% innings and Dave Engle like we're capable of. Shizuko Go's 'Requiem' on the Meaning of War

By Christine Chapman YOKOHAMA, Japan — I didn't have trouble until the end of the war because I believed what I was told absolutely. Then I spent many years lying awake in bed thinking about the meaning of the war," said Shizuko Go, author of the prizewinning anti-war novel "Requiem."

The meaning of war for the pacifist novelist is apparent throughout this powerful book. As one of the characters says: "To the people, individually, war is like a storm. It arrives unwanted, smashes their lives, and then suddenly blows over. We, the people, are the ones who sustain and carry on the war, but we're not the ones who begin or end it."

I needed a lot of time to change my way of thinking," Go said, "because I was devoted to the war. No one around me went against it until the end."

Twenty-three years after World War II ended, Shizuko Go, now 56, wrote "Requiem," a semi-autobiographical novel that depicts the suffering of Japanese citizens during the U.S. air raids on Yokohama. "Requiem" is a Japanese counterpart of Anne Frank's diary: It chronicles the relentless horror of war from the point of view of a 16-year-old girl. Written in 1968 for a Yokohama literary magazine, the intense, 122-page "Requiem" was published in hardcover by Bungei Shunju Co. of Tokyo in 1973. That year it won the highly regarded Akutagawa Prize, awarded to outstanding newcomers in fiction. In Japan, 200,000 copies have been sold. As the nation prepares to commemorate the 40th anniversary of the atomic bombings of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, bookstores are stocking the 10th paper-back edition of "Requiem."

The book was published in English in May by Kodansha International, translated by Geraldine Harcourt, a New Zealander. This autumn the Women's Press in London plans a 6,000-copy paperback run as well as a hardcover edition.

The style of the novel reflects the fevered confusion of the last days of the war, shifting from present to past, from optimism to despair. The 16-year-old Setsuko, seriously ill, lies in the dark underground of a crum-bling dugout shelter. Memories of family, friends, school and factory make up the story. Setsuko's family and friends die one by one, her father in the air raid, her mother in machine-gun strafing from a U.S. plane as she waits for a rice ration, her brother as a kamikaze pilot.

Striking images of the war-wrecked city underscore the impossibility of Setsuko's growing up normal. "Normal," for most Japanese, was to believe that Japan's cause was just and to accept killing as an ordinary event.
"The idea of killing or being killed is not unnatural in wartime," Go said. "People's way of thinking is completely changed."

In "Requiem," the rebellious Naomi, Setsuko's 14-year-old friend, remains the exception. She is the daughter of an imprisoned traitor, a university economics professor who spoke out against Japan's actions. Until her death, Naomi burns "with anger and hatred" at those who tortured her father for his beliefs.

Setsuko, ever loyal to Japan, becomes numb to tragedy, finally admitting. "I don't understand anything," but believing that "what I'm doing is right." Sent from high school to work in a factory, she tells Naomi: "At first, working the treadle on my welding machine took all my concentration, but I've finally grown accustomed to factory life. There are more steps tomaking a vacuum tube than I'd ever have guessed, and mine is a very small part of the process. . . It brings home to me that as a member of the Japanese nation I am playing a part in the sacred war for our ideal of a Greater East Asia Co-prosperity

In 1944, Shizuko Go was a schoolgiri recruited to work in a vacuum-tube fac-tory. On May 29, 1945, when the U. S. Air Force bombed Yokohama, she was at the factory and escaped the burning of the city. Like Setsuko in the novel, she walked to her home in central Yokohama through "bodies strewn about the road like so many charred pieces of wood."

Go said, however, "I was neither Setsuko nor Naomi. Setsuko's ideas were mine, but the story is fiction. I was an only child and my parents are still alive. They were in our house during the raid. It burned down, but they got out." The family then lived, with several others, in a railroad car.

"I was in that railroad car for only two weeks," Go said during an interview in her comfortable study. "But, as in the novel, we all got lice. The train was crowded, the lice jumped from head to head, also on our bodies. We couldn't wash. We had no soap. I don't want to remember it!" She gri-

Using half-burned pieces of wood, Go's father built the family a hut on the land where their house had been. Friends had offered to evacuate them to the country but

"My father said the same place would not be hit twice." She smiled. "Yes, we were attacked again, but not burned. People who moved to the smaller cities were attacked again and again. After the great Tokyo raid of March 10, the Americans began to bomb the cities to let people know that Japan was losing."
In a description of the May 29 raid in

"Requiem," Setsuko's mother finds a place to hide under a bridge. She holds onto a-girder and observes: "Firebombs kept spiking into the river right before my eyes and sputtering out. Well, I thought, Ameri-ca's not stingy with its bombs." When her husband does not return home, she goes searching for him, "day after day, even when the dead had been buried everywhere in temporary graves."

When she gives up, she tells Setsuko: "I just couldn't keep moving. I sat among the dead with my eyes closed as if I was one of them myself. I wondered if that mightn't be your father beside me for all I knew. And even after the bodies were cleared away I went back and sat there every day. It comes to the same thing. Whether it was him or not, it was all the same to me." The official count of deaths in the Yoko-

How Athletes Get Their Dandruff Up

By Gerald Eskenazi ·

NEW YORK — I began to scratch my head one day last winter when a football coach started to praise his players.

"It shows what the guys can do when they get their dandrull up," said the coach.
Of course, I knew what he meant. And he knew what he meant. Dander, dandruff -what's the difference? It comes from flying off the handle, doesn't it?

While many of my colleagues in the press box were chuckling over the malapropism, it occurred to me that I have heard my share, in covering sports for more than two decades.

When I was a young reporter covering the Mets, the manager left a lasting impression when he exclaimed, in the excitement of a close game, "That certainly was a cliff-dweller." The manager didn't last, and there were rumors that the renowned Yogi Berra was going to take his place. I telephoned Berra to determine whether he would be joining the Mets.

"Yogi," I asked, "have you made up your mind

"Not that I know of," he replied.

In my brief fling covering basketball, I stole a gem from a Hall-of-Fame player who had become a coach. His team was terrible. I asked him what he was trying to do to get it untracked.

"We've got to coadhere," he explained. The team never cohered, adhered or coalesced. He was soon

For most of the 1960s, I covered hockey. It was a sport garnished with the occasionally fractured English of some French-Canadians, But others contributed, too. One of my favorite people was Emile Percy (The Cat) Francis, who ran the Rangers as coach and general manager. He was a tough, wiry little guy. He iked his players to hit back.

After one particularly brutal game, he seemed pleased. With a grin, he said, "They didn't go by the Queen of Marksberry Rules tonight."

One of the coaches who succeeded Francis was a night person. He coamed hotel lobbies after his players went to bed. In his native Montreal, there had always been something to do late at night. Invariably, he would want to eat after a game.

"Send out for pizza — with all the dressings," he commanded Presunably, he did not mean bleu cheese or French, but sausage and onion and anchovies. One of his predecessors, the fiery Phil Watson, was an appressive skater from another era. In one game in the 1940s, he met his match in the Toronto Maple Leafs' aging but still burly, defenseman, Bucko Mc-Donald. Bucko repeatedly bumped Watson to the ice and Watson could not retaliate. He decided to get back verbally.

"McDonald, you're a been-has!" yelled Watson.

Football, though, seems to be the mother lode of melded expressions. I think this is because it has a tradition of dramatic locker-room speech. I was kidding around with a Jets' receiver. He was giving me generalizations when I wanted specifics. Finally, I reminded him of an embarrassing incident that had happened to him. "Cmon, Jerry, let a dead horse rest," he said.

One of his coaches was concerned last season about the way the defense was playing. Players were getting sloppy. The coach was going to do something about it.
"We've got to nip it in the butt," he said. And he went out and kicked some buds around. The team won

Even the playing fields of academe are fertile grounds for this sort of refreshing English. The following was relayed to me during the last Orange Rowl week by Barry Switzer, the University of Oklahoma's extraordinarily successful football coach. He says it happened to a coach he knew there.

The coach was in his office and was being interviewed by someone, who remarked that one of the school's top players had charisma,
"What?" shouted the coach. "Will he be O. K. by Saturday?"

Reporters were always ready for verbal gens at the post-game news conferences of Danny Ozark, who managed the Philadelphia Phillies.

Danny, what about your outfielder Mike Anderson? "His limitations are limitless." Ozark responded

And then, there are the stunning little surprises. I was doing a profile some years ago of Fred Lynn, then a Red Sox star with a classic swing. His usually tacitum teammate was Jim Rice. I wanted Rice's impression of Lynn, but trying to get Rice to agree to an interview was tantamount to squeezing water from a stone. Finally, he became communicative. "Fred Lynn?" he asked rhetorically. "A picture out

I have been intrigued with the sensitive Dems Polvin ever since he showed up for his first news conference, as a 19-year-old rookie, smoking a measchaum pipe. He has become one of hockey's great stars with the New York Islanders.

"There are two Denis Potvins," he said one afternoon on a park bench not far from his three-acre estate in Old Brookville, New York. There is the player and the real person - and they haven't met yet. don't think my total person has been expressed in hockey. My personal life will live forever.

Another baseball person who provided mexpected verbal insights was Steve Boros, who managed the Oakland A's two years ago. He was the only manager I knew who had been a literature unjor (at the University of Michigan).

In describing the dual worlds of the game and his off-the-field life, he told me: "There's a bawdy humor in the locker room and I love it. There's a sharp edge of wit. And then I can go bome and sead my literature." New York Times Service
